

Computer Forensic expert Jack Grimes joins TERIS Silicon Valley as Director of Computer Forensics

Addition of technology and computer forensic veteran solidifies firm's expertise in ESI collections and Electronic Discovery engagements

Palo Alto, CA – November 12, 2009 – TERIS announced today that leading Computer Forensic expert Jack Grimes joined the firm as its new Director of Computer Forensics. Grimes has been involved in the technology and eDiscovery industry for 10 years, during which time he managed the information technology team for one of the legal technology industry's leading consulting teams and gained a reputation for his forensic software and technology expertise.

"Jack's experience and expertise are important additions to our Computer Forensics team in Silicon Valley and TERIS California," said Kevin Brooks, TERIS Silicon Valley General Manager and Partner. "He brings unique experience to our company and clients, including recently leading the collections process for one of Silicon Valley's most visible technology companies. Jack has an outstanding reputation in the industry and his leadership will be critical as we continue to build this side of our business."

Grimes joins TERIS from Celerity Consulting, where he served as Information Technology Manager, overseeing the team of network, system, database, programming, and forensic engineers. At TERIS, Grimes will be responsible for training and developing the ESI collection team, managing large scale computer forensic and electronic discovery engagements, conducting forensic analysis of computer media and creating affidavits and expert analysis reports, among other responsibilities.

Grimes received his BSC from Santa Clara University and his MBA from the University of San Francisco.
